Pt III, Line 31: Endangered, threatened and protected species field response, outreach and data acquisition: Operating under our registered trade name - Hawaii Marine Animal Response (HMAR) - this program supports a variety of efforts related to the field response, preservation, recovery and stewardship of Hawaii's endangered, threatened and protected marine species. We are Hawaii's largest non-profit marine species response organization, covering approximately 300 miles of Hawaii coastline with our team of volunteers, interns and staff. Our Field Response Teams spend thousands of hours annually patrolling for animals, or responding to specific sightings, so we may document the condition of specific animals, identify potential health issues of specific animals, track locations of individual animals and record other data needed for species population and recovery research. Our actions save protected marine animals from deaths and injuries caused by disease, hookings, entanglement in marine debris and potentially dangerous or inappropriate interaction with humans. We are involved in animal intervention activity, stranding support and marine animal rescue to enable medical treatment, rehabilitation and release. We engage with the public to teach sustainable human and fishery behaviors resulting in improved public stewardship for these animals to support long-term species recovery. Our Outreach and Education Team works with the public to educate people about Hawaii's protected marine species and to teach each person how they can help with marine animal conservation and stewardship. We also participate in community events, make educational presentations at public venues and assist in development of community policy to inform residents and visitors about Hawaii's protected marine animals, the threats to species survival, and the actions we can all take to make an impact. Our Dispatch & Reporting Team manages telephone hotlines which each year receive thousands of calls and mobile app-generated reports from the public or government agencies of protected marine animals seen on shorelines or in near shore waters. This department also records and shares data obtained by our Field Response Team such as animal condition assessments, animal location information and animal behavior data, with NOAA to facilitate in-depth species research and population conservation and recovery efforts. HMAR is engaged in protected marine species preservation and recovery efforts every day of the year. Highlights of our 2017 activity include: Our hotlines recording nearly 2,900 sightings of protected marine species that were associated with field response activity more than 2,500 times. Each field response is important to enhance population research, to identify potential animal health concerns, to create important photo documentation and to reinforce public stewardship. In addition, nearly 400 proactive surveys for animals, on often-times remote shorelines, off-shore islets and near-shore waters covering more than 1,600 locations were conducted by team members to provide critical data for endangered species research. And our team was engaged in, or performed, over 70 escalated actions, stranding responses or animal interventions. On average, members of our volunteer and staff team were active performing field response to sightings, surveys, interventions, escalated support, outreach, education or dispatch tasks about 11 times per day (over 4,000 times in 2017). In any given 12-hour work day, our collective volunteer and staff activity was nearly 47 hours. Not only did our work have a critical and positive impact on species preservation and recovery but it also resulted in our ability to reach tens of thousands of people more than 65,000 people in 2017 with outreach and education so that these people are better informed and committed to do their part in protected species stewardship. In 2017, the dedicated activity of our volunteers contributed a workforce value of over $345,000 better than a 3 to 1 return on investment from the government funding we received.
